Overgrown Garden

A man-sized red-truck, job, weighing three pounds and ten ounces, was placed on our desk a few days since, for our inspection, by Mr. W. H. Huntington, of the Overgrown Garden Company. The box of this plant was very good and marked out of prosperity for a new friend. From the date of its arrival, no truer root appeared to be quite tender, jaundice, while the upper half exposed to sun and rain, was a little hard and parched. This production does not care what he does, even on poor soil. If our farmers and truck raisers could be induced to use scientific methods and get out of the old rate.
